School libraries should stay open two evenings each week.
First, students with noisy homes need a quiet study space.
Second, students who share devices can use library computers after lessons.
Staffing costs are a reasonable objection. A two-evening pilot with a fixed budget would limit that cost.
A limited extension therefore improves access while controlling expense.